Reckless Leaders and How to Handle Them

Matt Plen, Chief Executive of Masorti Judaism in the UK.

Politics in the western world is witnessing an upsurge of demagogic, populist leadership. In the UK, senior government leaders gambled with the fate of the country, tapping into popular feelings of resentment and alienation and leading the country over the brink of a decision to leave the European Union - all for the sake of political positioning and personal ambition. The USA is heading into one of the most intemperate Presidential campaigns ever, in which a candidate with a very real chance of winning has whipped up popular support by using violent rhetoric along with xenophobic, Islamophobic and misogynistic slurs. It's tempting to blame irresponsible leaders for these crises, both the protagonists I've referred to and their opponents for failing to stand up to them more effectively. Parashat Devarim, however, provides a more nuanced approach to this kind of political problem.

Devarim opens with Moses' recounting of Israelite history since the Exodus from Egypt. But his account of the sin of the spies (Devarim 1:22-28) differs from the version we read in Bamidbar (chapter 13). There God commanded Moses to send princes from each of the tribes to spy out the land. In our parashah, this initiative comes from the people themselves and the social status of the spies is not mentioned. In Bamidbar the spies themselves return with a negative view of the Land, saying 'we cannot go up against the people because they are stronger than we are,' and actively spread pessimism among the Israelites. This week Moses recounts that the spies brought a short but positive report of the Land; despite this, the people sulked in their tents, accusing God of bringing them out of the Egypt only to have them wiped out.

The story of the spies in Bamidbar reflects a top-down model of political leadership. The policy decision comes from God (via Moses) and the protagonists are leaders of their tribes who use their position to influence the people for evil. Devarim, in contrast, paints a picture of grass-roots politics: the people initiate the mission and are responsible for their own negative reaction to the spies' largely positive report.

Nechama Leibowitz argues that rather than seeing these versions of the story as incompatible narratives, we should understand them in terms of the Torah's own chronology. Moses' speech in Devarim comes 38 years after the sin of the spies, when, once again, the people of Israel are perched on the borders of the Land, ready to take possession. Last time the people failed. Moses wants to ensure this does not happen again. For this reason, his address stresses not the sins of the leaders - which he surely cannot have forgotten - but the personal responsibility of each and every individual for their own behaviour. Morality requires that we each take responsibility for our actions. 'The listener,' says Leibowitz, 'has the choice of turning a deaf ear to evil words or of allowing himself to be misled by them. It is his duty to resist.'

This lesson applies not only to interpersonal morality but to wider social and political issues. While the danger posed by manipulative populists should not be underestimated, those of us who live in a democracy are blessed with a unique opportunity: to resist demagoguery, to elect responsible leaders and, by holding them to account, to work for the common good.

May He who blessed our ancestors and is the source of all healing bless and heal those who are ill. May the Holy One Praised Be He mercifully restore them to vigor and lift the burden of anxiety from their loved ones and friends.

On this (Sabbath, Festival, Judgment or Penitence) day we pray that they be spared further pain. May God grant them health of body and health of spirit and mind. May we speedily be privileged to greet their return to good health by welcoming them once again into our midst. Let us say: Amen.

Anyone wanting to add a name to the list should contact Diane Shalom (216-831-6555 ext. 104 or dianeshalom@bnaijeshurun.org) by Thursday afternoon at the latest for inclusion in that Shabbat's program. We will also pause during the prayer for people to recite additional names from their seats.
