A Kabbalistic Tu B'Shevat Seder for Adults
Tuesday, January 30 • 7 pm

Tu B'Shevat has taken on many new and modern meanings, each of which has added new layers. This seder will follow closely the original, traditional Kabbalistic seder. Kabbalists understand an upside-down tree to be a metaphor for the way that God's light flows into the world. Through ritual, song, meditation and food, the seder seeks to celebrate the ten sephirot (aspects of God) through which God's blessings flow and to bring that shefa (flow) down upon ourselves to cause our lives and world to blossom. No knowledge of Kabbalah is necessary. The seder includes four glasses of wine, fruits, nuts and a sumptuous dessert.

$10 per person (program subsidized in part by the Weingold Adult Learning Fund). RSVP to the synagogue office.

School resumes January 6, 2018!

Dvar Torah by Dr. Joshua Kulp, Conservative Yeshiva Faculty & Rosh Yeshiva Joseph, Pharaoh, Bernie & God

The popularity of socialism, the collective ownership of the state's resources, is on the rise. In 2016, Bernie Sanders, an avowed socialist, won more votes from young people in the primaries than Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump combined. In a world in which a smaller and smaller percentage of people increasingly own a larger and larger percentage of the world's wealth and resources, it is not surprising that young people who perceive their chances of financial stability to be diminishing would look to another system to address their increasing sense that capitalism is not working.

It is easy to conflate socialism with communism, a system which in many modern countries inevitably deteriorated into totalitarianism and mass devastation, and dismiss it. But before we do so, we should look at two texts in the Torah: the story of Joseph's collectivization of Egypt's land found in the Book of Genesis, and the laws of land ownership and slavery found in the Book of Leviticus.

Joseph is gifted with the ability to read dreams and see the future. With divine aid he interprets Pharaoh's dream and foresees the famine that would soon follow the seven years of plenty. In Genesis 41:48, Joseph takes possession of all surplus grain and stores it, and in 41:56 begins to ration it out. As the famine worsens, however, things take a more sinister turn. Genesis 47:13-24 explains how Joseph leverages the food stores to take possession of everything, as the people trade all their money, livestock, and eventually land for food. The people are moved to cities, and they work Pharaoh's land as serfs, receiving the seeds from Pharaoh to grow food for themselves, with Pharaoh taking a fifth of everything. In other words, all capital has been concentrated in the hands of the state, and the state makes all resource allocation decisions.

But we would do well to remember that had Joseph not foreseen the seven years of famine, the Egyptians would have starved. The Egyptians themselves recognize this, and express gratitude even as they acknowledge their predicament. In Canaan they did not take such preparations and they paid the price. But Genesis is a world without Torah, and in such a world, Joseph's good intentions greatly magnify Pharaoh's power. Joseph initiated his policies to save people's lives, not to turn them into slaves, but by the end of the seven years of famine, Pharaoh is a totalitarian ruler who can do as he pleases.

A world with Torah, however, answers to a higher cause of goodness. According to Leviticus 25, nobody but God owns the land - not the people, and not their flesh and blood ruler. Only the ultimate ruler, God, has permanent title to the land and thus even when land is "sold" it cannot be sold in perpetuity (Leviticus 25:23). And while in Egypt Pharaoh's ownership of the land leads quickly to slavery, in Leviticus, God's ownership of the land leads to the prohibition of slavery. Human beings cannot enslave one another, because they cannot own one another (25:42). In a world with Torah, temporary inequalities do not become a permanent caste system. Created in the image of God, each and every human being has an equal right to God-owned resources.

One can, I believe, make a Torah-based argument against socialism and communism on pragmatic grounds. After all, Joseph's collectivization of property led to slavery. The Torah may reject absolute notions of private property, but when humankind tries to implement such a system, it deteriorates into all property belonging to the Pharaoh(s) strong enough to grab it and hold on to it.

But the idea that all human beings are born into this world equally, and that the oil in the Middle East, the fish in the Pacific, the abundant good land in North America and other such natural resources, belong to us all, is deeply ingrained in the Torah's vision of the world. The return of young people to the socialist vision of the world is a protest against the type of capitalism that threatens to turn the world into Egypt. Even if those with this vision cannot successfully translate God's rule into the rule of flesh and blood, there is much to admire in their attempt.

Table Talk by Vered Hollander-Goldfarb, Conservative Yeshiva Faculty

This Parasha opens with a great monologue by Judah. Joseph reveals his identity to his brothers, the family goes to Egypt, and Joseph helps the Egyptians survive the famine in a manner that makes almost all of them subservient to Pharaoh.

- 1) We open the Parasha with Judah's great monologue before the Egyptian lord (Joseph). He recounts the conversation between the Egyptian lord and the brothers. Look at 44:19-23: How does Judah portray the Egyptian lord, in light of the information the brothers willingly and trustingly shared with him?
- 2) Judah relates the conversation with their father about taking Benjamin to Egypt (a condition for procuring more food). Their father said 'you know that my wife bore me two children' (44:27). What seems wrong with Yaakov's statement? What do you think that we can learn about Yaakov's way of looking at his family?
- 3) Do you think that Judah had any suspicions regarding the identity of the Egyptian standing in front of him? Why?
- 4) After revealing his identity to his brothers Joseph asks them to bring the extended family to Egypt, and to tell their father of his greatness in Egypt (45:9-13). Why do you think that it was important to Joseph that Yaakov will hear about his great position at this point?
- 5) As part of the descent to Egypt, the Torah gives us a list (by name) of all the blood relatives of Yaakov that went to Egypt. What would be the purpose of such a list (rather than a 1 line description)?
