Biblical Espionage by Rabbi Avram Kogen

In this week's Torah portion, Moses sends 12 scouts to "spy out" (וַיִּתְּרוּ) the Promised Land. In the Haftarah, we read a parallel passage in which Joshua sends two spies west, across the Jordan, to size up the city of Jericho before battle. Might we expect that Joshua's sending of spies was simply a "replay" of the mission that Moses had initiated, we would be mistaken.

Joshua was well aware of the structure and the disastrous outcome of the earlier mission. Not only was he the protégé of Moses, but of course he himself had been one of the 12 spies and one of the two whose minority report was rejected by the people. That incident led to God's punishing the Israelites with forty years in the desert, certain ample time for Joshua (and his fellow spy, Caleb) to ponder the reasons and circumstances for their failure to convince the people.

One explanation given for the people's acceptance of the discouraging report of the 10 spies over the optimistic words of Joshua and Caleb is that the people were still deeply rooted in their slave mentality. Others have said that their faith was not serious enough, despite having witnessed the plagues in Egypt, the parting of the Reed Sea and the divine revelation at Mount Sinai. But at least one other factor played a role, which comes to light when we contrast the stories of the Parasha and the Haftarah.

The Haftarah opens by telling us: "Joshua son of Nun sent two spies secretly (סְרִישׁ) ... (שְׁרִישׁ) Commenting on the word secretly, Arnold B. Ehrlich (Mikra Kiphshuto, 1899-1901) says: Secretly - from all of [the nation of] Israel, for Joshua was fearful lest the outcome of [the mission of] his spies mirror that of [the spies of] Moses his master. I have seen fit to interpret thusly, since - had he [meant] "secretly from the people of Jericho" - what would this passage [be seeking to] teach us? Are not all spies sent in secrecy from the inhabitants of the land which they are setting out to survey?

Ehrlich wants the reader to be consciously aware that secretly modifies the sending process, not the manner of the spies when they are in hostile territory, since the need for secrecy in hostile territory should be so self-evident that the biblical narrator would have no need to specify it. The implication is that when Moses had sent out 12 spies, this was done publicly (within the camp), concealed only from the enemy. This would be consistent with sending out 12 well-known leaders, whose absence from the camp would have been noticed, even had they not been sent out with great fanfare.

By contrast, Joshua sent two unheralded (and unnamed) spies who were to report to him alone. The spies presumably realized that they would remain anonymous, and that their mission was more important than their fame.

Every leader has different strengths and weaknesses. Moses had the fortitude to confront Pharaoh and to lead a recalcitrant nation, but most of his work was done overtly; he was better at confrontation than he was at diplomacy. Joshua added a dimension of subtlety, when necessary. In learning from their examples, we should try to understand when we should be confrontational and when we should be diplomatic.

May He who blessed our ancestors and is the source of all healing bless and heal those who are ill. May the Holy One Praised Be He mercifully restore them to vigor and lift the burden of anxiety from their loved ones and friends.

On this (Sabbath, Festival, Judgment or Penitence) day we pray that they be spared further pain. May God grant them health of body and health of spirit and mind. May we speedily be privileged to greet their return to good health by welcoming them once again into our midst. Let us say: Amen.

Anyone wanting to add a name to the list should contact Diane Shalom (216-831-6555 ext. 104 or dianeshalom@bnaijeshurun.org) by Thursday afternoon at the latest for inclusion in that Shabbat's program. We will also pause during the prayer for people to recite additional names from their seats.
